

need advice on what to do with unwanted laptop Posted by tryingsohard - 11 Nov 2011 01:27

i need advice. i desperately want to get my laptop out of my house until i have my issues more under control. the problem is that there is nowhere in my house that i can pack it that i wont go to get it, i can't bring myself to smash another one (yes ive already smashed one in my lifetime, out of frustration from "the problem") its $600 and eventually i will start using it again because im in school. and i dont want to ask a neighbor to keep it cuz thats weird and potentially embarassing. its so frustrating! I DONT WANT IT! and yet it seems like theres nothing I can do about it! any ideas?

Hey struggling ,

I haven't done accountability software. I don't have anyone I feel uncomfortable doing it with.

Rabbi Viener from Monsey has offered to be an accountability partner and he does read the reports. If not find an accountability partner on the site. If you are really trying so hard you can find someone.

Do you have any friends who know about this issue? where do you live?

Password protect the computer. Write down an impossible-to-remember password, email it to someone (me if you like), then set the password and destroy the paper you wrote it on. Also delete the sent email. When you've gotten further into recovery and feel safe with a laptop, retrieve the password from the person you gave it to.

OK, I only asked where you live as maybe someone from this forum can help you. saying "new york area" or "Jerusalem area" might be enough to find the help you need.

why dont you lend it out to people who need it for school writing down chidushei torah or what not this way you can get it off your hands and do a mitzvah with it

i happen to know some avreichim (in israel at least) that borrow laptops to write down chidushei torah

hey snow,

oh ok sorry. i live in the new york area. i like alex eliezers idea of making a password that i dont remember and giving it to somebody else to hold. i think i'll try that.
