umm... i had a medical scare.

very very scary.

davened with more kavana during that week than i had for a while

of course, i was depressed, so i just davened that it should be painless.

but BARUCH HASHEM it was just a scare,

now if i davened for my recovery like i davened then, who knows what would happen.

thanks R' B.

i'm gonna keep that in mind when i daven mincha today.

I tried deleting it, but just as I tried pressing delete, a big piece of concrete from the ceiling fell

There have been a lot of sudden deaths in my neighborhood recently (oh no, now you know where I live).

A buchur died suddenly in his sleep. A young woman suddenly had a hemmorage in her brain and died; her baby was saved by an emergency C-section. The family is still sitting Shiva.

No sicknesses beforehand. Just sudden. And when you know these people, it's really sobering.

"Do teshuva one day before you die.' You never think about it, but a perfectly fine and healthy person really can be here today and gone tomorrow.

We can't just keep on waiting to straighten things out.

PRIMEVAL DESTINY

Out of the morning mist
While pearled dew still kisses earth
Tiptoes a silent Destiny
Day's mission engraved in tears
Printed on parchment created
Before time itself.

The "who", the "when", the "how"
- And always the "why" –
As yet undisclosed to those below
For Hashem wisely conceals
The date of demise from mankind.

Return your soul pure.
Each night.
In case.

Perhaps you will not witness
Dawn's kaleidoscope of brilliant hues
From beneath the clouds
Or hear the bird's joyful melodies

Mingle with the angels

Praising the Creator of new sunrises.

Make your last moments on earth

Your holiest.

It's not quite the same caliber but...

This morning I saw a pigeon get run over by a car.

The amazing thing was... it somehow stayed between the wheel.

It flew under the front of the car, flapped around, and came out the back. Still alive and in one piece.

I was sure it was going to get squished.

Hey, The pigeon is me! How many times did I not get run over by the trainwreck of p**n*graph*

7up is a lady?! No wonder she's writing poetry. Men don't spend their time on these things. Bu it's the woman who know how to bring in some feeling and emotions into these things.
