Usually after a week the desires just continuously build up till I feel like I can't handle it anymore

When you remember something that arouses you, or you see attractive women etc. do you just try to move on or do you take some other action first (e.g. surrender, for example)?

When you move on do you think your mind really lets that desire all go or does it hang on to it in the background?

Do you know of anything you could think or do to make your mind let it go each time?

A CPU only has a set amount of resources to run multiple threads at a time. By raising the priority of the applications in foreground, you leave over less processing power for the applications in the background. Eventually the system would either force kill the background apps or at least hibernate them depending on the OS setup.

Your brain works in a similar fashion. By being fully in mind with the task at hand, you leave less room for background thoughts. It can be called mindfulness, living in the moment, or similar names. One of the ways to get rid of background thoughts, is to overpower it with positive conscious thoughts.
