

Applauding the Brave Men of Yerushalayim

Posted by Elya K - 20 Dec 2009 20:37

I just wanted to applaud those of you who braved the zagged path or anonymity to venture out into the darkness of Chanukah and attend the Kumsitz in Israel. I was commenting to my wife last night before I read the post that we should have something like a weekend or meeting for GYE in the states. I am currently gathering together the people who are giving phone conferences to see if they would be willing to serve as hosts for a weekend.

What are your thoughts about volunteering to host, help, etc. and / or attend.

I have no details. This is just in the embryonic stage. Your comments are welcome and appreciated.

Elya

Just curious:

Did you guys consider yourselves "brave" when you got together or was there another, stronger emotion - and what?

Honestly NO. I did not think of myself brave at all. In a way i felt relief. felt a relief to be able to talk to people, live people and let some of my feelings out. I actually was very nervous each and every time someone came through the door. But i kept telling myself; The pros out there say that this is such a strong tool for our fight with our addicton so im gonna follow theier direction
