

New post, old topic..... ideas any one?

Posted by sci1977 - 04 Jan 2010 21:16

I know this has come up a few times, but it's time to bring it up again.

Do members of GUE think we should have a closed forum for the spouses (wives) of the addicts?

Second, should we have a seperate area for just married men to discuss what they are going through?

I'd like to know what everyone's opinion is on this.

I personally think Guard should work on the most selfless thing for this website first and that would be for the spouses of addicts to have a place. We all need to be more selfless and married or not the spouses are hurting and probably need the most help. We are at least here to help each other. My two cents.

Being that I am not married I wonder... How many spouses actually know of their husband's addiction??? I dont want to start a poll because I think its EXTREMELY personal.

It might even be for a member who is already here. We really don't know how many spouses need help, but they need an option I think. Married forum, chat meetings ect, are all ideas that give us more tools. Spouses of members or non members have not many outlets that I or my wife can find and like. Also, I beleive if we as members said, OK its better for someone else to get help in general we are acting selfless in our own battle. I know guard will do the right thing for this website and what he chooses to do or not do is probably in the best intrest of everyone.

This whole website is extremely personal.

I'm gonna make the poll right now.
