

My struggles with kedushah

Posted by tzaddikvikam13 - 13 Oct 2024 18:26

I've gotten off to a nice start, right now I am starting my seventh clean week.

I'm going to be continuing my journey from where I left off in my last thread under Introduce Yourself over here.

I know this has been mentioned before but might be good to repeat.

HHM told me that a person came to the steipler struggling in kedusha. The Stiepler said he wants to kiss the hands of someone who held back even only sometimes. The fact that you were able to fight means a lot! Be proud of the fight you put up and take that encouragement to fight (and be"n win) the next battle!

Chazak V'amatz!

As i've been learning recently about how many people struggle with these things and how normal it is, its begun to dawn on me...

that my struggles with kedusha might just be the most normal part of me.

Yesterday I was m'ing in the shower.

I felt like I really wanted to be doing it, and at the same time I wanted to stop, but it was too hard iyh50 was on the phone with me, trying to be machazek me and help me stop. I was continuing the whole time he was talking, it felt too hard to stop, even though I knew everything he was saying was true, that it wasn't worth it & that I really didn't want to give in.

Then I told myself that even if I feel like I really want to give in and it feels too hard too fight back, I can pause for a minute, and continue afterwards if I feel like I still need to.

I stopped for a minute and didn't continue.

Boruch Hashem I didn't come to mz"l.

Sat down to a seudas mitzvah afterwards.

Wow! Now that's a real win. I would tell you to celebrate but you did already.

I was in the bathroom today and started having a really strong urge to m.

It was a hard battle, I wanted to give in, but I stayed strong and didn't.
