

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 19 Mar 2025 17:08

Its very nice seeing how when new comers join the club, how some guys offer to help and inviting them to reach out personally.

However, To all the well meaning offeror's - Pls take in consideration, that if you don't have the time/energy etc. - to help out, pls don't offer to help in the first place.

Reaching out to another and opening up isn't easy, and its extremely painful that after speaking with someone once and then having him disappear or keep on being pushed around.

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 18:11

eerie wrote on 20 Mar 2025 17:17:

I should add, it's possible the OP meant ~~someone he connected to through the mentors program~~. My friend, there's a reason why that program was taken down for reconstruction.

I'm sorry that you're in pain, Jubilantfalcon

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 18:16

eerie wrote on 20 Mar 2025 17:14:

"eerie" post=433127 date=1742490842 catid=1

I am torn about whether I should respond to these posts

If the OP was hurt by me, then I take it very seriously, and I will try my utmost to take on only what I can, and C"V not hurt anyone by leaving them hanging.

If the OP meant others that help, I feel very differently. Yes, we should be careful not to hurt people even inadvertently. And for a person to point out that a well-meaning mentor left him feeling very alone and not truly cared for because he was too busy to get back to him, I hear that. But to suggest that these people, who I, and truly most of us, know that they are in this for no other reason than that they care deeply for the people that are going through the pain of unwanted behaviors, mentors who give away 'free' time that they literally don't even have, mentors who call, text, email, who give their hearts away, who sit and think and plan how they can help the people they are in touch with, mentors who when you tell them of your wins they literally dance along with you, to suggest that they are doing this for themselves?!?!?! That they are using others?!?! Yes, it is possible that because they all have limited time available that there will be people who need more time and they will not be able to help. But let's remember that they are not getting paid, and they are not forcing anyone in, they are just offering what they have, and for some, what they have may not be enough. They are doing a wonderful thing to offer help, and those that it works for will be eternally grateful.

Yes, we can all do good to listen to someone's pain. And I'm sorry that the pain caused such a mistake in the judgement call. The pain is terrible. And the mentors here are wonderful, selfless, caring people

Hi,

I am not new here, was here a while ago for quite some time with a different user name, and I know the forum etc. and I stand still with what I wrote.

I am not saying that all the helping guys are that way. What I am suggesting is to take a deep look within where the drive to help others stems from.

The answer isn't relevant inasmuch that if its just to build one's ego, and to feel good walking around thinking; "Hey, I am super busy smart dude, people run after me for help and advice.

then one should work on himself and not USE others.

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 18:18

eerie wrote on 20 Mar 2025 17:14:

I am torn about whether I should respond to these posts

If the OP was hurt by me, then I take it very seriously, and I will try my utmost to take on only what I can, and C"V not hurt anyone by leaving them hanging.

If the OP meant others that help, I feel very differently. Yes, we should be careful not to hurt people even inadvertently. And for a person to point out that a well-meaning mentor left him feeling very alone and not truly cared for because he was too busy to get back to him, I hear that. But to suggest that these people, who I, and truly most of us, know that they are in this for no other reason than that they care deeply for the people that are going through the pain of unwanted behaviors, mentors who give away 'free' time that they literally don't even have, mentors who call, text, email, who give their hearts away, who sit and think and plan how they can help the people they are in touch with, mentors who when you tell them of your wins they literally dance along with you, to suggest that they are doing this for themselves?!?!?! That they are using others?!?! Yes, it is possible that because they all have limited time available that there will be people who need more time and they will not be able to help. But let's remember that they are not getting paid, and they are not forcing anyone in, they are just offering what they have, and for some, what they have may not be enough. They are doing a wonderful thing to offer help, and those that it works for will be eternally grateful.

Yes, we can all do good to listen to someone's pain. And I'm sorry that the pain caused such a mistake in the judgement call. The pain is terrible. And the mentors here are wonderful, selfless, caring people

I am not new here, was here a while ago for quite some time with a different user name, and I know the forum etc. and I stand still with what I wrote.

I am not saying that all the helping guys are that way. What I am suggesting is to take a deep look within where the drive to help others stems from.

The answer isnt relevant inasmuch that if its just to build ones ego, and to feel good walking around thinking; "Hey, I am super busy smart dude, people run after me for help and advice. then one should work on himself and not USE others.

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 18:23

eerie wrote on 20 Mar 2025 17:14:

I am torn about whether I should respond to these posts

If the OP was hurt by me, then I take it very seriously, and I will try my utmost to take on only what I can, and C"V not hurt anyone by leaving them hanging.

If the OP meant others that help, I feel very differently. Yes, we should be careful not to hurt people even inadvertently. And for a person to point out that a well-meaning mentor left him feeling very alone and not truly cared for because he was too busy to get back to him, I hear that. But to suggest that these people, who I, and truly most of us, know that they are in this for no other reason than that they care deeply for the people that are going through the pain of unwanted behaviors, mentors who give away 'free' time that they literally don't even have, mentors who call, text, email, who give their hearts away, who sit and think and plan how they can help the people they are in touch with, mentors who when you tell them of your wins they literally dance along with you, to suggest that they are doing this for themselves?!?!?! That they are using others?!?! Yes, it is possible that because they all have limited time available that there will be people who need more time and they will not be able to help. But let's remember that they are not getting paid, and they are not forcing anyone in, they are just offering what they have, and for some, what they have may not be enough. They are doing a wonderful thing to offer help, and those that it works for will be eternally grateful.

Yes, we can all do good to listen to someone's pain. And I'm sorry that the pain caused such a mistake in the judgement call. The pain is terrible. And the mentors here are wonderful, selfless, caring people

So your saying, that all those offering help are doing it out of pure intention?! I hear you!

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 18:33

I am torn about whether I should respond to these posts

I appreciate your answer. But could you pls share why you chose to respond? and why you were torn about it?

=====
=====

Helping others?
Posted by yitzchokm - 20 Mar 2025 19:17

I don't see a reason to write so negatively on the forum about someone. Except for that person nobody knows who you are talking about so there is no Lashon Hora involved but think a little bit about how that person must be feeling now. Even if that person was trying to boost his own ego I don't think that it is right to write about him publicly the way you did. I am sure that at least in his mind all he was trying to do was help you. You should wait until you are here with this username for 30 days and consider whether it will serve any constructive purpose to discuss your grievance with him directly through private messages. Either way, I suspect that you owe him an apology.

Posting publicly the way you did about someone you are calling a mentor seems to be casting doubt about the integrity of many mentors on GYE and that is simply false. In general, the mentors are doing a very good job and they are giving selflessly of themselves with a passion to help others and they deserve our praise. Your basis for posting was a personal experience with a single person but your manner of posting implies that there is something wrong with the whole system.

=====
=====

Helping others?
Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 19:43

Posting publicly the way you did about someone you are calling a mentor seems to be casting doubt about the integrity of many mentors on GYE and that is simply false. In general, the mentors are doing a very good job and they are giving selflessly of themselves with a passion to help others and they deserve our praise. Your basis for posting was a personal experience with a single person but your manner of posting implies that there is something wrong with the whole system.

I am not saying that all the helping guys are that way. What I am suggesting is to take a deep look within where the drive to help others stems from.

The answer isnt relevant inasmuch that if its just to build ones ego, and to feel good walking around thinking; "Hey, I am super busy smart dude, people run after me for help and advice. then one should work on himself and not USE others.

=====
=====

Helping others?
Posted by eerie - 20 Mar 2025 20:21

Even to suggest that is wrong. Yes, you are in pain. I get that, and I feel for you. But to get up and suggest, even to suggest, that perhaps some the people here that give their lives away to help others are doing so without really caring, only because they want self-gratification of some sort, is utterly wrong and disrespectful

Again, your pain is making you come to some conclusions, and they are wrong. It's hard for a person to see past their pain, I understand, but we all know that your 'suggestion of perhaps some' is wrong.

Yes, everyone is limited, and yes, we can all improve in conveying in a nice way "I'm sorry, I can't help you". No, they can't help every single guy in every single situation. So they offer help. Those that they could help, that time allows, that is challenged in a way they can help, they help. Those that it doesn't work for, they can't help. And that's that. Nobody that I know means to grow themselves at anyone's expense

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by cleanmendy - 20 Mar 2025 20:28

I feel your pain, though I must set the record straight. Not the record that you had a bad experience, that's true, as you write. But the record about the mentors on here.

I was in the 50th shaar of tumah just less than 90 days ago. Its hard for me to write, but I will to defend the reputation of the mentors. I was in person on almost a weekly basis. Talking to prostitutes across the world. Clubs were a part of my life. I was a on every social media platform sharing and viewing the worst of our depraved society. There's more to unload but I'm not sure its beneficial for everyone to read.

My point is there's only one reason why I am clean now for 79 days.

Mentors

When I told eerie I'm not interested, he pushed me. Iwlr reached out months after I ghosted him. My dear friend held my hand when I thought my life was over.

In my experiences there was not a drop of 'self' in any of their holy work, only selflessness.

I cant imagine the pain that you went through, losing trust, feeling betrayed after opening up. But please be careful in your words when writing in general.

Also realize that these mentors are not paid for their hours upon hours of time, no public credit for their work. And def no credit when they don't get through to someone, which happens all too often.

I hope I'm not coming across as rude or not understanding. I just cant sit on the sidelines.

Hatzlacha, and I sincerely hope you find someone who you can place your trust in, to help recover.

You could reach out to me, my email is in my signature.

=====
=====

Helping others?

Posted by jubilantfalcon18 - 20 Mar 2025 21:09

Okay, So after getting all the responses on here, it seems that I am the only one that had a bad experience, though, the experience I had was real, and I still feel that I do have a valid point - but again - that's my personal view. (I might be wrong), Therefore, I wont continue this thread.

And I would like to apologize to all I have hurt. My intention was not to hurt anyone's feelings.

=====
=====