

Reading pn

Posted by Chazak Amenu - 04 Apr 2010 03:15

Why is it that reading pn gave almost as much gratification to me as looking at pictures? the only reason i came up with was so i could feel like i was the character in the story and since i am young (15 if you consider that young :-\) i could read stories about kids my age (this will not trigger people right?) is there a deeper reason?

=====

Re: Reading pn

Posted by briut - 08 Apr 2010 21:45

CA:

Maybe the original track of this post is getting lost.

Well, of COURSE reading is as big as watching. Probably more so. When we (I??) watch, we're stuck with the director's decisions on hair color, voice, whatever. When we (I???) read, we can fill in the details however we like. Even skip a page or reread some.

Reading simply requires more brain synapses than listening to radio, which requires more than watching a boobtube. So it's well, more, well, stimulating to the brain.

So maybe I'm missing part of the question in your original post? Have the posts answered your inquiry?

=====

Re: Reading pn

Posted by Chazak Amenu - 08 Apr 2010 22:08

overall the posts have answered my inquiry as they always do!

=====

====