

Is this good advice?

Posted by Anonymous - 11 Jun 2010 19:43

Is it good advice/ muttar to tell yourself that if I wait X amount of days, I can/ will be nichshal in hz"l? Basically is it smart to reward yourself with the thing you are trying to stop?

I would say it best to say: "I WILL NOT act out for the next x days". Dont reward yourself with what you know is bad for you. Reward yourself with soething better and more fullfilling. After the x days do it again.

Have a great Shabbos!

Take it one day at a time. Tell yourself "just for today, I won't act act". "I reserve the right to act out tomorrow, but today I won't act out even if my head falls off".

"Head" - no pun intended.

There. Does that help, Yiddle? ;D

Go back to your crows nest and leave Yiddle alone, it was my turn to annoy him, not yours!

In all seriousness, Anonymous actually might take that the wrong day. Guard didnt mean to say it today and then tomorrow act out. He meant worry about today and only about today. And when tomorrow comes you can say the line again: " I will not act out today even if my head falls off". (Though I still think thats a bit extreme, even for you Dov ???).

By the way did anyone get my drawing above???
