Rebbe b -

Not knowing much about forum ettiquette (should one go onto your thread to address you?), HI!!

I thought about you and about all the forum people that I could remember during shacharis this
YK. It was the best part, as far as I am concerned.

It's funny, but there is only one tefillah during which I get a "second wind" and take a long time during "elokai, netzor" to go through all the people I know, one by one. It seems that no matter how much my feet were aching before, during that one shm"e each YK I don't feel them at all! At the end of talking to Him about all the people, I never want to leave, if you know what I mean, and just stay there saying nothing for a while.

I hope He isn't bored of me then. :D

Love to you and everybody else here who I know of and don't yet know of (es hagluyim lanu ve'es she'ainam gluyim lanu)!!

- Dov

Dov,

I was greatly embarassed when I saw your post over here.

You are a global moderator and there are absolutely no excuses for this lack of etiquette.

This is not high school any more.

There are several threads regarding yom kippur.

This could go in the davening thread.

Or it could go in a personal thread that you start.

And generally you do not have to enter one's thread to address them directly as long as your post is slightly on topic.

This is the Captain's special thread.

Please don't let it happen again.

Once again, in this simple, humble post, all the mystery of life is revealed by the bardichever.

Pass the Voodford.

so much love...

and such an appropriate thread to share it all,

cause we owe our ability to share our love with one another to none other than HKB"H!!!

and his faithful shaliach,

THE HEILIGER GUARD!

(don't get confused if you're from NY,

I did mean G-U-A-R-D)
