In science there is a theory in quantum physics called the Uncertainty Principle. Basically it says that if you know a particle's speed, then you cannot know its location and if you know a particle's location, then you cannot know its speed. The particle has a set speed and location, but we can never know both at once. This is not caused by our instruments. It is caused by the nature of what speed and location really are. I could go on, but it gets very complicated very quickly. My point is this. A similar idea can be used in the Free Will vs. Destiny paradox. We have free will and a destiny, but we cannot study them both at the same time. If you don't understand this, you are probably not alone. It is quantum physics after all.

Thank you Hashem for quantum physics.

I have not yet found a question-without-an-answer in judaism besides for yediah-bechira (which, by the way, I thought has an answer until Rabbi Yaakov Emden disproved it for me).

But i heard a bunch of answers to it....

You guys better stop quoting kabbalah. It's lifnei iver for non chusids under 40

Duh, I also heard a bunch of answers... and I wasn't quoting Kabbalah, it's something I saw in a non-kabbalah sefer from Reb Yaakov Emden, and I didn't fully understand it, so I went to Reb Shimmele Hitteroigener [I know his son, whatever] and he got Reb Yaakov to explain it to me...

Thank you Hashem for providing me with a bekitshe for Shabbos.

Thank you Hashem for the misunderstanding I got into yesterday which taught me that I'm human and make mistakes.

Thank you Hashem that as a result of that I learned to humbly beg forgiveness.
