

Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?

Posted by R76 - 27 Nov 2013 06:40

I have read a few Jewish books in my life (I am 37). I had very little contact with Jewish community. Thus I am somewhat ignorant on my heritage.

This seems to be the only site where we discuss sins. To my shame I have committed the sin discussed here. To my shame I still observe only a small part of Halacha.

=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?

Posted by Dov - 17 Feb 2014 04:16

The past?

How did you get to the therapist you saw before? Not with their help?

=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?

Posted by R76 - 17 Feb 2014 04:22

Dov wrote:

The past?

How did you get to the therapist you saw before? Not with their help?

This one with their. Yes, there are many things for which I am grateful to them -- they support me.

In many ways my life is better then that of a prisoner in Scandinavia -- they do not have Internet.
But the best prison is still a prison.

I do love my parents and I faithfully take care of my grandmother -- it is my sacred duty and mitzva. But I can not share too much with someone who takes away my freedom.

=====
=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?
Posted by Dov - 17 Feb 2014 05:20

Will they take you to a therapist, or not?

=====
=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?
Posted by R76 - 17 Feb 2014 05:32

Hopefully in two weeks.

=====
=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?
Posted by Dov - 17 Feb 2014 05:33

You, my friend, are a good man.

Hatzlocha!

=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?
Posted by R76 - 17 Feb 2014 05:41

Thank you very much. I hope I can keep up and ascend to a different level of understanding.

=====

Re: Why is confession not part of Jewish tradition?
Posted by Dov - 17 Feb 2014 07:29

Me too, man.

=====