You have found the right place. Look around and find what works for you on the site. read and post on the forums. Connect and share with others.

Best of luck. Keep us posted.

Welcome to GYE!

God can help you overcome this and He will if you put in the required work and let Him in. Start with the tools that GYE suggests in the links below and put the work in. There will be plenty of discussion in this forum, which in my experience does little to help, unless you take action with it.

Hatzlacha!

The first thing you need to realize is that sex is optional, yes we have normal desires, but if don't feed them, they can be manageable. When we feed our desires with fantasy, porn and staring in the street, we only compound the problem.

what many here that are on the 12 steps program are learning is that recovery cannot be dependent on our sex life. We can recover only when sex is optional and not when sex is mandatory for our recovery.

Having that said, this may answer your concern about how you can recover if you are divorced (and have no sex life for now). Actually many found that it was easier to recover when they were single!!

you may want to give us some details in what way you are struggling, so some here would be able to give in their advice and experience they have had.

No one on earth can help you overcome that which G-d created us with.

Normal sexual desire is here to stay (baruch Hashem).

What you can help yourself with is self-induced sexual arousal that leads to masturbation.

Like MBJ said so succinctly.

WELCOME! There have already been some good posts. Although you are in a difficult situation, the tools are the same for all of us. Read the handbook. Keep posting.

Acceptance can be a very powerful tool. Many married addicts accept that sex is optional and voluntarily go through long periods of abstinence.

How does anybody know that this fellow has a porn or masturbation problem?

He has a sexual desire to be with a woman....ok....why do you wanna overcome this? Perhaps you have other issues; please tell if you want.
