

Advice please

Posted by wanttogetbetter550 - 18 Mar 2016 11:51

hi

i have porn addiction since my yeshiva years and have managed to stop for long periods but without complete success I have a wonderful marriage and I have admitted to my wife that I have an addiction but not how deep it is or how bad the videos are

she is obviously upset but we are deeply bonded and she is supporting me all the way however I feel a little guilty that I haven't told her that it's really porn (I told her girls in underwear videos)

but at the same time don't really know if telling her is going to help me any advice??

Welcome!

It was a little risky telling her, but she wants open communication...

Did you tell her when this started?

yes i have told her this goes back about 12 years.

you have to understand we are madly in love and completely obsessed with each other hense her understanding im just not sure i can tell her the truth about the videos am i right holding that back?

Her sensing you're hiding anything isn't good

I asked my therapist and Rabbi first, and in your situation you may wanna do that too you need guidance.

it will probably not come from here.

Look I got a Haskama from the great moderator Cordnoy for you to speak to someone reliable - Rabbi / Therapist

Its a free country, you can choose to do what you wish

Rabbis surprisingly offer their services free (If you don't have a personal Rav, it's about time too)

I know the feeling what you're going thru, and if you do it right, your marriage can grow!

It sometimes helps the wife to know our struggles, and has helped me, but it's not her responsibility, whateva, I need to work and we can continue taking later

Now get on your truck and vvvrrrrrooooooom

Where do you see what the gye charter is?

I haven't found it yet

Your original question was

"I don't know if telling her is going to help me"

The point of a wife is not to be our therapist nor guardian angel

I assume most if not all the members here, gained sobriety without the wife's help

Why would you want to tell her?

why would i want to tell her?

because i feel with her support i can get through this just afraid of her reaction

The question, or better said, the answer is a very delicate one and complicated. There are many variables. It is best answered by someone who knows you.

This is a website where u can get advice and support, and most of us suggest that you speak with a professional before potentially losing your wife's trust forever simply for the selfish reason that YOU can't get through the day because of your guilt. I don't mean to be harsh, but I do mean to be frank. This professional could be a rabbi, therapist, old wise man at the city gates, it doesn't matter, but don't make these decisions alone. Sometimes when we are steeped in this stuff we can make the most rational of decisions. And we will support you no matter what happens or what you've done so good luck and hatzlach! We're here for u!
