Welcome Yankel.

Fellow struggling Yungerman here as well. I know the awful feeling of living a double life, as well as the feeling of really wanting to stop and not being able to.

There's no quick fix. Read the Handbook and stick around here. And remember that if you fall again it's just part of the process.

If you're looking for a someone to talk to check out the partner program.

Hatzlacha!

I'm only gonna address the bentorah part of you that understands the mechanics of a Sugya

In my humble gye mechanical experience there actually are quick fixes. Not overnight, but in short term.

The real question is how serious are we in actually fixing the specific mechanical failure we each uniquely have

Many of us that see the letter E flash on the dashboard next to the gas gauge, are quick to take a hammer and smash the light, instead of realizing our emotional tank is EMPTY. Yes that aggravating light doesn't bother is for a short while, until... That's like [example removed to inhibit disputations] for many of us

I think the bigger issue is being committed to go to the right mechanic and get the quick fix that is needed.

WE ARE NOT SUPPOSED TO BE STRUGGLING DAILY

Is it a new steering wheel? Transmission? I feel like relative to other dear friends here that I only had a blowout in my tire and got a new one 11 months ago on gye

I wish each one of you a safe trip

TOGETHER

You hit nail on head. We are not suppose to be struggling daily and many look for temporary "fix" and not look for root emotional that cause addiction and acting out. SA, acting out, looking on dirty materials is only symptom of deeper problem.
