So glad it's not out of control.

Personally, once I start looking I'm out of control.

Welcome,

It may be a good idea to accept the fact that taavas nashim is something that you're going to struggle with as long as you're a healthy male.

That doesn't mean you can't be clean for long periods of time, or forever (one day at a time) it just means that you'll never be "cured" and "free".

Hatzlacha.

Stick around a bit and you may realize that tayvas nashim for your wife may be also a misdirected tayva

Have you read any of u-r-a-Jew's or Dovs posts?

I think that tayvas nashim is part of growing up for a healthy male. When you get married i think your tayva is supposed to be focused towards your wife and no one else. Ina ny case, ina struggle is absolutley right, we will nevr be truly cured and free from this tayva, just when you are married the tayva is being placed on an appropriate person(your wife)

Please share your story, we would love to hear it.

well i found out the hard way that if you dont save it only for her it will couse you alot of problums and besides its very easy to confuse tayva (lust) that you create with what you think will be for your wife

Guys imagine a bunch of drunks that need serious Alcoholics Anonymous group support (due to imbalance ;-)) have a discussion and conclude that they should direct their addiction to the weekly kiddush club which is a Mitzva of course...

The same is when saying this regarding the wife in my little opinion

A little silly...

Anyone want a lechaim?

ODAAT
