Red Face, thank you for entertaining me for a full 30 min. I had to read through this entire thread. I envy your clean streak, but not as much as I envy your writing skills!

Either get out of the dungeon or send me your location, please.

Now that I am somewhat (not totally and certainly not forever) out of the dungeons, its a good time to reiterate to always call a friend when your feeling down. Even when you think its more fun to ignore everyone's calls, the truth is that just keeps the cycle of negativity going.

I just had a conference call with two wonderful friends ,(y'all know who you are) and while the censor had to beep out almost all of the conversation, so I don't know what was said- (Pretty sure I heard someone encouraging me to jump off the Astronomy tower without my broom) It is unbelievably heart warming to have friends to fall back on when the stress level gets to damn high

I chanced upon your thread today and just finished it now. Nice to finally get familiar with story of the legendary redfaced.

You could not have possibly written a finale that resonated with me more than the above point.

I've been in that dungeon (or maybe a different one) for many months now, and can totally relate to the sentiments that you expressed, but Lma'ase, there is nothing like keeping in touch with people. Even when it's much more enjoyable to wallow in misery alone.

P.S I'm not impressed by your volunteer work with Techloq. I've actually sent them emails in the past about issues with their filter (under the guise of a Rebbi who advises many Talmidim and has 3rd party experts try to get around filters...), but never received a response.

Last couple days I was wistfully remembering the good old days of being in the dungeons.
Sadly life is not the cup of tea I wish it were and I am having a tough time dealing with emotions/stress.

The friends are keeping me going

As long as you haven't seen the Grim in that tea of yours..

Pray hard that the wistful memories will suffice.

Or end quickly.

For me it didn't do the trick when the going got tough, and the rest is history in the writing,

Hi, I'm new to GYE. My username is azivashacheit101, I've seen some of your posts and it's been really really helpful. The fact that you use humor just makes me feel so normal and ok to be fighting what is normally a dark and gloomy battle. The line in your signature about sending you an owl, howler or crumple horned snorkack almost made me laugh out loud and really made my day. My whole perspective on this fight has been much more light and positive since seeing your posts. Thank you so much for teaching me that when the Bogart emerges from the closet in the form of an urge for P, M, and some heavy dark depression all I have to do is raise my wand and yell riddikulus! That 3 headed dog will start doing somersaults in a clown costume in no time whatsoever! Thank You for your help YBDazivashacheit101

I'm not sure which of my posts had Fluffy spinning somersaults but it is possible that I was obliterated....

Feel free to actually send the crumple horned snorkack, Instead of just talking about it.

Keep up the good fight.
