BabaYakob Welcome to gye!!
litvish, no?

Great place here, great friends such as Reb HHM.

I read your post carefully.

This has NOTHING to do with Chasidish.

ZERO.

And I'll prove it to you.

I have a question for you (only).

Pray tell me, if you were born 'Litvish', how different would your life look if you struggle as many of us do?

Markz I'm gonna very respectfully push back.

Yes, once someone's in the grips of lust it doesn't matter if his justification is fat wives, fat chassan teachers, hasidic wives, skinny wives, litvish wives, red fish blue fish or two fish. His focusing on the "problem" only distracts from the real problem - his inability to keep his warm clammy hands out of his own pants (or however you want to define his problem).

But when we're talking about societal forces that push people into addiction, then identifying social forces is relevant. Dov has a great recording on the site about why so many frum people become lust addicts. Turns out that lying, hiding, repression, guilt, forbidden fruit and stolen waters, and the whole package of complex emotional background that ~~Judaism~~ some current educational systems applies to sexual sins is a breeding ground for making the problem worse.

I'm a big believer in the futility of trying to change the system. But it's a valid grump, and that's what we're all about here.

Grump on my friend! And keep on trucking.

To explain what i was refering to above - In some (i stress - some) chassidish circles, intimacy for the sake of intimacy is frowned upon. "A hug together in bed and that's it" is not promoted. "The mitzva" is for the sole purpose of having children and "being together" twice a week. It is strongly advised to designate two specific nights a week for "the mitzva". Touching the wife's private parts is frowned upon - especially oso makom. Causing climax is not discussed at all. Even chibuk v'nishuk is barely mentioned. Pajama tops are worn. If the chosson rebbi does not pick up on any seichel/intelligence limitations of the chassan, the fellow may walk out not even knowing what he is supposed to do.

The above "recipe" can be problematic in two ways. Some guys simply cannot handle it (nor can some of the wives). They "need" more. That is the case even with guys who were never exposed to pornography. They feel very empty after being together.

Secondly, our antidote to pornography is to introduce to a fellow the beauty and geshmak in giving a wife the appropriate mitzvas onah - an emotional mitzva with a physical component. The typical fellow who reaches out to us is b'ezras Hashem cured by switching gears from taker to giver. For a fellow who was educated that many of the things we are advising are forbidden, it causes massive confusion. This is where a chassidishe rav can be beneficial - to explain to a struggler what is actually assur, what is additional hanhaga, and how this particular couple should be nohaig.

please do not make this post the fodder to bash the chassidish system. i am only presenting the issues so we can together see if there is a way to assist strugglers from this community in a way that they do not feel they are forsaking their mesorah.

Rabeini HHM now I'm understanding why you are the king over here. You understanding the real big problems like it really is, I was scared that maybe no-one is going to understanding the hardship in my struggling, but you understand so good you making me feeling so comfortable here.

And like you say the chasidishe system is very good and very very heilig, but not everyone is in that madreige ?????? I'm should one day get up to that heilige madreige, but for now I'm needing help ????? ??? ??.

Thank you R' HHM and thank you everyone else for the very warming replies. it really warmed my heart, and now im feeling that im ready to be part of this family and really fixing myself.

Spending time on GYE, one comes very quickly to the realization that no one group has the "copyright" on yiras shomayim. There are heroes from the yeshivish, sefardic, modern orthodox, chassidish, chabad, plain old fashion orthodox, etc. communities. They can live on any continent and be almost any age. If we would make a Shabbaton for all the forum posters and other GYE members, it would resemble a Tuesday afternoon mincha at the Kosel - a colorful potpourri of all stripes. (Actually, we would also have the representation of the kanaim communities that avoid going to the Kosel as well....) Mi k'amcha Yisroel!

Babayakob, welcome.

GYE friends, for this important thread, I believe it would be useful for Reb Yakob (and others in his situation) to hear from others who are from his background or people who have been involved with people from his background (like HHM).

For the rest of you who have not been in his shoes, and find this thread deliciously vouyeristic, perhaps you should sit this one out and really listen to what those with actual experience have to say.

Shem wrote very well above. But even he, and the rest of you, might be missing a bigger picture.

On this site we have tunnel vision when it comes to lust and we get very black and white about it. Often, this is a helpful way of looking at things. But I suspect that here there is more at play:

The lack of a secure emotional bond between husband and wife, and a vast gulf between the human need for loving attachment and the stiff, rigid reality of “intimacy as a chore.”

And yes, litvish people have struggles too. So do celebrities who are married to the supermodels we all drool over. Because they get caught drooling over other supermodels all the time.

But it's levels of magnitude harder if you don't have a baseline of healthy sexual attraction and emotional intimacy at home. When your wife does not present as feminine or embraces her femininity.

Not only is it harder, it's an entirely different ballgame. You're coming to a person playing chess with tips about checkers.
