

just realised i am an addict

Posted by andrewsh - 18 Feb 2010 17:39

wow, after all these years it has dawned on me that i am an addict!

I have tried to fight it so hard, and succeded even for long periods at a time, but now i realise it will never just go away.

I am so scared to write anything...what happens if someone i know, somehow reads this and knows its me, particularly my wife i am in a bad place, bh never gone as far as involving someone else, although dreamt about it enough, but its eating me up, both what i do now, and what i have done over the years.

help please, although my vagueness doesnt really help

=====
=====

Re: just realised i am an addict

Posted by Dov - 22 Feb 2010 22:36

Stop worrying about your brain so much! You and your brain! Here's some good advice: Take a shot of Woodford, make a brucha and have a tiny sip. Read a paragraph. Have another little sip and read another paragraph or two. By this time, you will have fallen asleep twice, so you may need to make another brucha. Make the brucha and have the rest of the Woodford, then finish the megillah and go to bed.

There. Now, what more could you ask for?!

MAMB!

=====
=====

Re: just realised i am an addict

Posted by andrewsh - 23 Feb 2010 11:09

Dov, wow, thank you.

May i make a couple of points, not all directly related to your post.

Firstly the reason i was avoiding the 'addict' label was not because i viewed addict as something that was so terrible, because i dont feel any better about where i am. The reason i would like to avoid the 'addict' label, is due to that if i am an addict then it involves 10 times more work and a lifelong commitment. I do realise however befor you all start ranting that this does require tremendous work and a lifelong commitment. I am purely in the early stages of self denial etc.... but realise deep down something solid needs to be done, hey its day 6!

Another point, i must say from reading many various posts, and chatting to people, i fell kind of good that the worst physical action i have done is the occasional mas, compared to the ppl who did it a few times a day, and lo oleinu had prostitutes. This is terrible for me, because i know everyone is on a different level has different bechira and nisyonos, but i need to keep myself aware that even one drop in vain is the most terrible aveirah!!!

=====

Re: just realised i am an addict

Posted by silentbattle - 23 Feb 2010 16:03

Anyone on this site, no matter what their situation, can find ways to feel good about themselves, because they're not as bad as everyone else, in some way or another. The trick is to be inspired and see how other people are higher than we are, and learn from them!

)

=====

Re: just realised i am an addict

Posted by Dov - 24 Feb 2010 02:00

andrewsh wrote on 23 Feb 2010 11:09:

The reason i would like to avoid the 'addict' label, is due to that if i am an addict then it involves 10 times more work and a lifelong commitment. I do realise however befor you all start ranting that this does require tremendous work and a lifelong commitment. I am purely in the early stages of self denial etc.... but realise deep down something solid needs to be done, hey its day 6!

I hear you loud and clear - and remember the same feelings. But let me tell you that you are making a bit of a funny mistake, chaver. Not facing it and doing the lifelong work is only a guarantee of lifelong work of a different kind: hiding, lying, and managing two lives while sturggling for all the normal stuff (family, job, yiddishkeit, money, friends) that we all expect life owes us...once you find out that you are hooked, that means it's basically a program of recovery or a program of garbage for us.

We are on a path of lifelong hard work, either way!

No wonder the drinkers drink so much. They want to drown themselves rather than face the fact that there ain't no easy way out (steve miller band?).

Nu.

Really, once we go to meetings, or whatever we become a part of, and begin recovery, we all find out that life isn't that bad...in fact, it's nice...wait, it's interesting and sometimes exciting...hold on there - it's awesome!

Well...everything takes time.

Just don't rush. You'll miss half the fun! 8)

(and if you could follow this stream-o'-consciousness post, I'd find a shrink fast ;D)

=====

Re: just realised i am an addict
Posted by imtrying25 - 24 Feb 2010 12:12

(and if you could follow this stream-o'-consciousness post, I'd find a shrink fast ;D)

=====

=====

Re: just realised i am an addict
Posted by Dov - 24 Feb 2010 19:24

No. You need a really good shrink!

;D ;D

=====

=====

Nu, so are you willing to take me on rebbi??

Re: just realised i am an addict
Posted by ieeyc - 29 Dec 2017 10:30 someone wrote:"silentbattle" post=54284 date=1266547568 catid=19Most of us have tried that approach - and yet, we can keep doing terrible aveiros right after learning intense mussar. OK, not right after - on a good day, we wait a few hours.

=====

Re: just realised i am an addict

Posted by cordnoy - 27 May 2018 15:24

Dov wrote on 22 Feb 2010 03:49:

jewinpain wrote on 19 Feb 2010 02:10:

i just wonder, who told u this secret that u r an addict, how about u just lust & for that u need to learn a bit musar isnt that what ??? ????? ????? ????? ????? ?????? stands for???

Dear jewinpain,

I'm kinda bored, too.

), that probably nobody can tell anyone else that they are an addict. For two reasons:

1- It probably will not be accepted to the depth that it needs to be to make any difference at all for the addict. This has been my own experience and what I have seen meeting many people in and out of recovery.

The conclusion that worked for me was the one I had to reach in my own heart. Many hundreds of silent nights with masturbation, screaming nights visiting schmutz sites and establishments, phone use for lust, and other disappointments washed over me. I even got caught and didn't stop. I was repeatedly shocked at my failure, after such sincere regret and teshuvah.

A great rov told me that the answer was more spirituality, though he had no clue that my very spirituality was twisted and only contributed to my very problem! See, my yiddishkeit had developed during the very same years that my habitual use of lust and schmutz developed into my preferred, safest, and only really reliable coping mechanism and nechoma to the pains and fears of normal life. It seemed to work for many years, though it sucked the reality out of me, slowly replacing true devotion to other people and Hashem with self-absorption. And the yeshiva experience itself - being so self-absorbed in ruchniyus self-development for our future lives...only land-locked me further. There came a time that there were no answers left.

Another rov told me I needed to explain to my wife that she wasn't enough fun for me. Let's not even get me started on that one, though I bought it hook-lin-and-sinker at the time....Nu, osah r'tzon ba'aloh, right?

Two shrinks told me that I needed to learn how to get more healthy pleasures out of life....more self-centeredness. Another told me it was no big deal....and he was frum. Yet another told me that 12 steps was silly, cuz "you want to get better, not learn how to live with this problem." He put me on meds and did therapy for 10 months while I got progressively worse, to his amazement. They all helped me and hurt me a bit, in different respects.

Rav Twerski told me (over the phone) in 1992-ish that I'd probably not get better unless I did intensive therapy, went to rehab, or joined a 12-step recovery fellowship. I told him "thanks", and knew that there was no way in gehinnom that I'd be able to hide those things from my wife, and I'd better really try harder! Eventually I couldn't even hide my addiction from my wife and even that didn't stop me (though it worked for a few months - If GYE wouldv'e been around). It took me five more years to finally rush myself into whatever help I needed, come what may. I saw that I couldn't stop.

Amd I came to SA and havbe been sober since, because Hashem obviously loves me and has the power to help me. But most importantly, I let Him. And I needed a lot of help to learn how to do that, and got it.

So, no. I don't believe anyone can determine for another that they are an addict. In my case the experts were right, but it did no good. As the gemara explains out of the posuk in mishlei, "taychas g'orah b'leiv meivin - meyhakos k'sil meyah". It's gotta come from in my heart if it'll do any good - a k'sil like me just won't really believe it, until I become a meivin in my own heart.

Besides all that, I find it hard to believe that most of us are smart enough to know if someone is an addict or not. Usually it's like Kedusha says it - it's trial and error. The only, really sad question we need to ask ourselves is how much evidence do we want? I personally know folks who have been arrested for (blatant) sexual misconduct and still came away from it basically blaming the cops for entrapment, rather than admitting that they have a serious problem.

Along the same vein, I know talmidei chachomim who have been oiver on gilui arayos, schmutz, masturbation, you name it, habitually many times and went for years hiding it (and some still are). And they say they were not hiding it because they want to be able to keep doing it, but because they honestly believe that: "eventually I'll beat this, I know it! Hashem's just got to help me out here! So why rock the boat in the meantime and ruin a great marriage and screw up my children with divorce? I'm trying. I'll do something about it!".

Gevalt. A great marriage? Screw up the children? "I'll beat this"? Who suffers in the mean time while these and many other hundreds of yidden like them are "trying something"? I wonder who has the right to encourage them to stick with the old-fashioned way and learn mussar harder, while the family crashes and burns? What does it do to a 14y.o. yeshiva boy to see his father who taught him how to leig'n t'fillin last year, carted away by police for soliciting a minor for sex in a chatroom (like more than one father I know), or get divorced because of a destroyed marriage after years of secret porn (and what it leads to) driving the parents apart (like other fathers I know)? What wife deserves this?

OK my rant is over, and it's too long to read, anyhow. I love you (even if you fell asleep already!) and am just sharing one little guy's experience and opinion. I have no monopoly on the truth, no more than you do, and respect your opinion. You may agree with some of, or everything that I said. Whatever. Just sharing. It's good for me, especially when I'm bored and haven't been on GYE for over a week!!

Tell me what you think, OK?

I actually read over 90% of this megillah. Great stuff (and other posts on this thread as well).

=====
=====