

Black Licorice Lowers Testosterone Levels

Posted by RoshYeshivasSon - 23 Aug 2013 18:17

Black licorice (or liquorice) contains GLYCYRRHIZIC ACID which, studies have shown, dramatically lowers testosterone levels. While long-term studies seem to be unavailable, it will definitely help you in the short term. It is not a panacea; you will still have urges; but it will help remove a little intensity from them. You can either buy it as a capsule from a health-food store (I find them in most drug stores) or you can buy black licorice treats if you like them (REAL black licorice, not twizzlers)

for kosher black licorice try "Darrell lea" licorice

WARNING: THE FDA RECOMMENDS THAT PEOPLE 40 AND OLDER SHOULD BE CAUTIOUS ABOUT CONSUMING TOO MUCH BLACK LICORICE (SEE

Interesting,

Thanks for sharing that tip.

I was surprised at first that this didn't generate much interest, but after a couple weeks I think I understand; people don't want crutches. Some people won't even use filters!

But one thing I can tell you: it works.

Take a stroll around the block, a few times if necessary.

I suppose black licorice jelly beans won't do it either.

No, those are just flavored to taste like black licorice, they have no actual licorice root in them.

And if you hate black licorice it's even better: it's a kapparah. And it builds character.

Thus I should take less. What would be a safe dose?

Is there a safer alternative for lowering my drive?

I am celibate and thus do not need a drive.

How am I supposed to know? I am no doctor! Maybe you could ask a doctor...

The drawer of my table which once had certain magazines (which I threw away) now contains mathematical papers and Valerian and Licorice Root pills.
