

Nalmefene

Hi- my psychiatrist prescribed a not so well known medication called nalmefene for lust (in Israel the brand name is selincro). You take it on an as-needed basis, as many times as you need it and it lasts for 18 hours a pill. I find it cuts lust craving completely for a few days. Its an amazing medication and almost noone knows about it. It is not used in america so much yet, but it is used in Europe a lot. It is known mainly as a drug to cut alcohol craving, but it works amazing for lust. I just feel I have somewhat of an achryus to at least let people know it exists- and I realize that Guardyoureyes is really the proper hishtadlus. ANYWAYS- if you could look into it MAYBE it could be another great tool in this battle. Please look into it before discarding the idea. Thanks, Tizku Lmitzvos. Here is a few internet links about it. en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nalmefene www.addiction.com/6619/nalmefene-first-alcohol-treatment-drug-in-15-years/

you have to check with your doc, depends on the other meds youre taking. I experience tiredness, so I would take it at night- i also sometimes get nauseous and weakish for a few hours.

the difference between this and antidepressants my good man- if you read my post like a proper dude- is that this is not an ongoing medication- you take it when overwhelmed by lust.

Sorry I'm not a proper dude

I prefer a sledgehammer for a lust attack - it's quicker, and you don't feel any side attacks

Ok - no laughing allowed its not yet Adar II

Man if it works for you ODAAT

Great

one dose at a time

Thank you togetheratlast.

IT could be a good idea but it shouldn't be the primary solution, the primary solution should be working hard until you get there.

Wow-- sounds very interesting. I know about (and am taking) naltrexone, which is also generally for alcohol abuse. I wonder if "nalmefene" is related to "naltrexone".

Right! Remember Rabbi Dr. Twerski's lobster mashal- on how it grows a new shell?
