Perhaps for some, but for me it is about doing the right thing at this present moment- regardless of how many steps I have climbed or fallen, and truthfully, whether I am even on a ladder at all.

Although I don't agree with the message, but you can't get everything...

Now this is an image I can understand

You're entitled :-). Which part?

Disclaimer, my comments feel nitpicky even to me. I like the image more than I disagree with the message.

?OK, so the first part reminds me of the Rebbe with the big stick (how's that for imagery) back in the cheder teaching us the Hagada and impressing on us that the only true ben chorin is someone who is not a slave to his Yetzer Hara.

For the 2nd part, I have no idea what happiness is, I only familiar with the artificially generated type, and I have occasionally enjoyed what I do.

Interesting. I misunderstood your disagreement.

I do what I like quite often, but it feels more like slavery than freedom.

You'll tell me, "then you're not doing what you like!," but I have a hard time accepting that.

I think we're saying the same thing.

I dislike doing what I like (actually I hate it).

It's interesting that you feel that way. I thought that for those on this site, the idea that we are a slave to our passions and not free at all is much stronger feeling then it is to others.

As far as the second part, based on those clean-streak numbers in your signature, it seems to me that you have been at least temporarily "freed" from the passions, During that time did you enjoy what you were doing? Were you happy? (btw, I'm not sure if one can over analyze himself if he is really really happy. Then he becomes un-happy just because he is agonizing over the state of his happiness.)

Warning: Spoiler!
