Thanks for the Grammer lesson, it was very informative, "but at the same time" it was also enlightening.

Grammar

love you!

R'Grant, I just wanted to thank you from the bottom of my heart for putting your time into this amazing project. I only found out about the story on friday, and today Motzaei Shabbos I binge read the whole story. I only wish my chosson Rebbe would have some material like this to share with me before getting married. I absolutely agree this should be a must read for bochurim and especially soon-to-be married bochurim.

Please keep up the great work and incredible writing. As a guy who wishes to remarry soon, your story is a huge wake up call for me. I sincerely hope I don't go through Moe and Esther's plight. I commend you for describing the woman's side so vividly. In fact, this is perhaps one of the greatest contributions of your tale. We have no women here to describe to us men how it feels on the "other side". Now we have Esther, and it sure is bone chilling. Although I'd hate to revive the machlokes that interrupted such incredible work, if anything, this whole story only diminished my desire to act out.

A big yasher koach from Brazil.

BTW loved the honorable mention in the initial chapters lol

The latest addition was gevaldig! I'm looking forward to putting the whole thing together as a PDF for people to download on our website (when it's complete). It can give some very important perspective to those who struggle with this. Thank you!!

WOW this new installment hit rock bottom.

I feel that this urge to keep on going when in lust even though you know its wrong, just leads you the wrong way, until its too late.

I know the feeling, when I would watch one video on youtube, the next one would be semi kosher until

Thanks grant you are truly amazing

The power of a good story!

?I was literally shaking when I was reading the new installment.

?If people would internalize how far we can fall (and still be able to rationalize about it) we would be in much better shape...

Grant - keep it coming - it's a true learning experience like nothing else!
