Welcome back, people were really worried about you around here. (Not only for the stories). I thought something happened to you. Happy to hear that you are still alive.

Thanks everyone!

Alive and kicking BH, just started something new and barely had/have a minute to breathe.

Thank you to all those who reached out!

I know your busy and barely have a minute to breathe...

I don't want to be a pain...I'm really trying hard not to ask...3 second rule...stop it...keep on trucking...3 second rule again...remember this story is optional...

but could we get another chapter?

darn, failed...the temptation was to strong...

Unfortunately, so far this week has been hectic. I'll try my best iyh.

I just want to ask that if anyone reading the story found any part particular triggering, inappropriate or just plain distasteful (especially for bochurim) please reach out for me to edit those parts. (Obviously we need to keep in mind about which clientele we cater to on this site).

I've had quite a few concerns and misgivings over this story regardless of the final decision made regarding the continuation, and would at least like to keep it as neutral as it can be while still making its point.

Thanks!

Thank you.

I don't think you should make it more neutral it will loose a lot of its shock value. You have a tremendous talent for writing in a way that we get caught up emotionally and It really hits home.

I fully agree. As a bochur, I have never seen something with as strong a shock effect as this story. It showed me what the real life effects of lust are, without the fantasy-fueled ideas of what married life is. It gives me an impetus to try change, knowing how much it can wreck any chance of a happy marriage. Please write more and keep up the literary style. When its finished you should make it into a book and provide it as a resource for chosson-rebbes. Thanks

That pretty much summed up my feelings as well. Don't really have anything more to add(-: You are an amazing writer, a big inspiration to me, and i can't wait to read the next part!
