Skep's question brought tears to my eyes yesterday.

Warning: Spoiler!

Really. It's deep.

Anyway I'm basically finished, I might pop in to the office again today just to really wrap things up, but for like two minutes.

I don't know why, but I can't get this voice in my head telling me to look up what Chida writes in Maagal Tov about Paris to shut up. I don't need to look it up, I remember what it says [vaguely].

Ecstasy.

For the second time in my life- since I first tasted the sweetness of masturbation, I have gone more than forty days without it. Wow. Friday was the big day, I sat in this g-d forsaken Zionist hotel deep in "Vacation-City", on the couch, with tears in my eyes I said: Hashem, thank you, Are you making a stop in Paris? thank you for bringing me here, thank you. I beg you, I beseech you, please, please, give me another forty, and another and another. Thank you for all that you've done and please help me get through this Shabbos with the girls, the waitresses, the women.

And He did, He came through for me and I had an immensely spiritual Shabbos experience. Then came Sunday and some complete insanity, though I haven't fell. I pray to Hashem to get me through Monday and allow me to enter Chanuka in holiness and purity, and most importantly, in sanity [separate words- not to be confused with the one word: insanity].

In other news: Lipa Schmeltzer released a video of a song to be on a future album, in which he pokes fun of people who don't shave or trim their beards. The name of the album: The Hidden Spark.

Matisyahu shaved and released "Spark Seekers". Does history repeat itself?

Or, you could've just said:

Today, Today, Live like you wanna, -let yesterday burn,

Throw it in a fire, in a fire,

Live like a Warrior!
