Dear Chaver, I feel so bad for you - you must be miserable.

Is it possible for you to change Yeshivos? Chazal say:

??? ??? ????? ??? ?????? ????? ???

And al pi halacha (Hilchos Kibbud Av Va'eim), one may even go against the will of his parents if he feels he will be more successful elsewhere.

But if not possible, then you need to realize that this matzav is what Hashem prescribed for you, and your avodah is to make the best of it.

Take it from me - an old timer - I always hated to learn - it made my stomach turn - but I knew that this is our main tafkid on this world, so I stuck it out (sometimes with mesiras nefesh). And now, decades later, I cannot say that I always love to learn, but B"H it became a natural habit and a way of life. And at least whenever I finish learning, I feel very good about it.

Like with all problems, talk it out with Hashem - explain that you want to do his will, and ask him to remove all obstacles. The sforim say (I think Sefer Chassidim) that when one earnestly asks Hashem for success in Torah learning, he is guaranteed that Hashem will grant his wish.

Hatzlacha,

Sorry Google, but it is time to replace you and the term, especially for this perv.
From now on it is Yiddleit.com As in "Why don't you yiddleit "how to enjoy learning Torah?"
It doesn't have the same ring yet, but B'Ezras Hashem it will.

Hatzlacha in all things GOOD!

And another way 'how to enjoy learning Torah' is to be mechavein when we say Birchas HaTorah - veha'arev na - make it sweet for us, please.

Great!

What has worked for me, besides keeping track of when I was clean and when I fell, is to take a look at WHY I fell. What was happening in my life? What stress was building up and compelled me to find some sort of release. I started to see the underlying causes--the emotional pain that I was covering up with acting out. And, I started to find ways to cope with that--the more I dealt with that, the less I wanted to act out (the DC phone conference, in particular, changed my life).

Good luck.

Thanks guys I hope Hashem helps me i cant get through one day without him i get insecure go crazy about my learning .I dont know if the Yeshiva im in is the problem or just standard yetzer hara.I just hope im on the right path.I am very confused but everything in my mind just resorts back to Hashem or more correctly I make myself think about Him and then I feel better because even though it doesnt change the situation but i try to realize that i want this way and He wants a different way and there is nothing I can do about it. I still have a very difficult time in my struggle I dont know what to do But I do know that it is precisely at that point where Hashem could enter.

Listen to this we can cope but that isnt our goal But true recovery is not to have to cope with our own conflictions. Maskim?

Awesome!

It's about a new design for living. It's about more than just coping, but thriving. About making connections with Hashem and with each other so that we don't feel like we're just coping with our addiction, but learning to experience life.
