Indeed you are not alone; we are all with you, holding your hands and wishing you success.

I remember myself being in a similar situation as you, starting the count again after a deep long-period fall. Then I asked myself the following question:

"what am I going to do different this time than last time to prevent the next nasty fall"?

I will try harder?

Not sure harder will work for me (or any other addict).

Then I joined a phone conference group and started working the 12 steps seriously, getting the concept of this struggle in a total different perspective (: not a struggle at all, at least not MY struggle). This time hashem keeps me alive - I already bypassed my previous count - one day at a time.

We would love to see you going on forever o recovery path, please do it for us ?

thanks chevra for your replies.. t means a lot to me anyhow.. so what or how am i going to do different this time around.. well yes ill work harder.. I believe that updating my journey on this forum will help me stay focused and on task... i havnt done that in a while (I think since the new forum is on) yes and I had done before a clean streak of over 100 days, just by staying put.. so if I can get there now I hope to be able to surpass that milestone..

going into day 4.. 3 days in the can.. nobody could take that away... forever
