Btw many filters didn't work for me, I've spent massive amounts of time getting around them, that's why accountability software is so good for me, I'm not even starting to look for an entrance to the slippery slope

Me personally if Im given even filtered internet(for sure unfiltered), with no accountability whatsoever then Im almost positive Ill find a way around it(if theres no way the person who set it up will know Im getting around it). Accountability has been huge for me(webchaver).

I guess to each their own. But you have to be brutally honest with yourself and make sure its not the yetzer hara

Lots of stress weighing down on me + other triggers present ,so of course my mind tells me that sexual pleasure would be a welcome distraction, but I started saying to myself, who gave me the ability to masterbate? Hashem did , does he want me to , Heck no , that helped somewhat , and in general when my relationship with Hashem is on a more personal level it seems to be easier (which is why it was so easy for me to be clean during the COVID crisis- Hashem's presence was so visible ..)

Peace

I have found that simply sharing stress helps relieve the urge. Allowing myself to be human and telling someone, be it my wife, a friend, or workmate that I am having a rough day because of finances, work issue, or whatever it is... eases things up. Of course a good walk around the block helps too. But I wish I could have that clear emuna you seem to have....

On a more serious side, HHM gave some great advice.

Feeling stronger urges for the first time since before Rosh hashana, I guess it's because the high of the Yomim Tovim is gone , plus triggers that were present and stress on the way in...

For me the end of Y"T and the beginning of the winter symbolizes real life.

real life is stressful.

Stress equals self soothing behavior.

You all know math.

I hear what you are saying, I disagree though, we can't discount a month of the year as not real life - it's a different aspect of real life , think of it like seasons.

Not to mention that it's a time of plenty of stress and triggers maybe even more than usual , particularly this year with the Covid situation there are all kinds of extra stress and disappointments .

Last night I was setting up a new phone for a family member even being alone wit it for a little , and despite being in a really positive place for a nice stretch , In no time my heart and mind started “Hondl’ing” and cheshboning , I blocked the internet and vaytur.

It was again a reminder of how critical avoiding accessibility is to me , and I know I have to fix myself and not let lust control me etc , and I do work on myself in different ways, but I see that step 1 must be to remove access.

And I don’t think that makes me weak , the opposite in fact .

It is as weak as not wanting to open up your office on a street that has 10 houses of prostitution on it. It is as weak as deciding not to have a pantry full of treife goodies in your house (and just telling the children "choose correctly").

Let's call a spade a spade - With the exception of some very few unique individuals who are true ba'alei mussar and ma'aminim, nobody is safe with unfiltered internet without safeguards. Of course there are levels. Some of us could stay kosher if the access is temporary. For many others, even that is too much. Gedolei Yisroel have repeatedly instructed again and again - Hashem wants us to avoid access - not to have access and show that we can stay kosher.

Of course it's not a sign of weakness! It's brute strength. Kol hakavod!

Just don't forget the fact that you did have access to open internet and you did block it. That is amazing and truly spectacular. Yes blocking accessibility is key and the vital aspect of overcoming these struggles, but to be able to stand up to the temptation you did, shows that you are definitely in a very good place. A place higher than only having strength when denied access.

Admitting weakness is a sign of true strength.

So I’m putting on my therapist glasses to figure out why my having access will lead to acting out.

On a basic level the spade which HHM pointed out.

But if I dig a little deeper in my past, from when I was a teenager having been exposed to the world of sexual “pleasures “ I was fighting a battle, touch don’t touch,mastebate fantazise porn phone sex etc (unfortunately some of this is before Gye and before I connected to it so I was doing a lousy job) .

Than There was the effort to access things , all the sneaking all the effort spent getting around filters and outsmarting myself , once I was married it was also having to hide the trail from my wife , so when I would access something there was that feeling of accomplishment like overcoming a challenge - think getting obsessed beating a game. It became that the hunt was in a way more exciting than the prize . With that I believe I conditioned myself that when there's access to automatically feel a strong pull to chap arein.

Now I know it sounds like I just explained why filters are no good , but again like we keep hearing they are good it just needs to not be the exclusive tactic because it won't stand up to the pressure , you need to work on the lust from within, with a mix of the various tools and strategies.

Addionally on a practical level to have the stronger filter , I switched phones to have better protection, and yes there are times when I have a lot of triggers and I would probably act out but the lack of access saved me.
