thanks613 thanks for replying first yes i might be very hard on myself however many things that i take personally are things that are true meaning really do need to be worked on however you are right that i need to "chill out" a little but my thoughts are that do to some bullying when i was younger i became very) regarding your' p.s....while i think my rebbe gets it for he has taught highly at risk teens in N.Y. for years i just think his approach is to rough for me

I do feel that there are people here that can get me but still not sure who i would "open up" to just yet still feeling everyone out let me know if there is still something that needs clarifying

Thanks for your reply Mayan! (and for yours GS!)

I'm glad to hear you say that the things that bug you are "real stuff". Sometimes I get oversensitive or overreact to things that maybe I shouldn't too. Not so much because I was bullied, but maybe some other things when I was younger that are partly responsible for my reactions nowadays - family/parent stuff mostly. I think that if I don't recognize that it's real stuff, at least to me, then I am lying to myself. And if I want to be entirely honest with myself, then maybe I can still find ways to manage those things better so that I can react more like "normal" people might (people who don't have the same associations that I do).

Either way ,the fact that it's real stuff probably means you're not crazy with a capital "C", and I'm pretty sure I'm mostly sane as well.

And 'feeling out the forum' sounds like a reasonable approach to take for now, but keep your options open.

look in the address bar at the top of the browser.

says "start=xx"

for whatever page you want, subtract one page, then multiply each page by 15.

for page 4 type in "start=45" (3x15)

for page 10 type in "start=135" (9x15)

Let's hope that just because they can't spell, they know arithmetic.
