

I will make it b'e"h

Posted by MayanHamisgaber - 19 Dec 2016 23:17

Just started my 90 days journey (hopefully indefinitely) a little nervous as for years i have had very long stretches with feeling nothing and then WHAM massive fall which would then spiral out of control until someone found out. But now i have gye and everyone here who are so encouraging and thoughtful that i know i can do this for good !

what is more frustrating knowing there is a light but not seeing it or seeing it and then losing it?

Who the i.e. cares?

Sounds like a competition between extremely frustrated old you and extremely frustrated new you.

zero sum game?

We prefer to play the 'same old same old' game

This way we get to stay in the driver's seat

Every time i took the wheel I drove over a cliff.

That is why my passenger side has their own brake and access to the emergency brake

Either God is driving or we are controlling / slamming on the brakes. (in this analogy as I understand it)

Let go and let God means no brakes to suddenly decide to take control with.

Its not a simple discussion, although its easy to talk about.... it is a core part of the 'problem' though.

I am not saying I am there. I am just saying that I am now working on not letting anything but God drive.

In this picture the driver(s) floored the brake pedal and emergency brake, as they slide on their 'same old same old' game

GS

This one of the major differences between addicts and non addicts and is indeed not simple

Markz

I try not to get on the road/drivers seat when things are slippery and dangerous but obviously I am not perfect

I accept this.

I also think non-addicts could gain a lot from letting God drive.

The question is what should addicted non-addicts do

I don't think that's a question

Not being an addict this reincarnation, I may be talking from inexperience

All of us can only survive with Gd in the driver seat

An addict has a more difficult time allowing Gd in

Can someone define clearly what it means to be in the drivers seat?
