Thanks for sharing your trigger with us, it helps us all remember that we all need each others help around here, and it inspires us to reach out in times of need. We all have these struggles around here, (most of us are just to embarrassed to admit:)) and the courageous and honest ones like you are the ones that really succeed.

Keep it up! Hatzlucha!!!

Re: Trigger Posted by Piyut1 - 20 Aug 2019 16:19 Thanks! Truth is that years and years ago, I was in a 12-step program and was sober for up to almost two years. Long story short, not true for so many years and I have recently decided to try again. While it has been less of a struggle to stay sober this time, I KNOW that that yetzer hara is always there and is super patient. All I need is one misstep and the Old "Friend" (ie, the yetzer hara) will be there to "help" me along. Knowing I can write here is a big help and thank you all for that! Re: Trigger Posted by cordnoy - 21 Aug 2019 05:01 By the way, bein' home alone is not a trigger; loneliness, however, is. Godspeed to all

Re: Trigger

I am not saying it is "A" a trigger. I am saying it is MY trigger. Number one I never feel lonely BH. Secondly, being home alone IS a trigger for me because it "enables" me to do things unencumbered.

Hi Piyut1,
I totally relate, and I admire your honesty to post! I was in a similar situation last night (already had planned what I wanted to search for, etc.), and two things specifically helped: 1. I made a phone call and told my friend (someone in SA) exactly what my plans were, and asked G-d for help. 2. Book-ended - I told someone that I was going online and that I wanted to commit to not lusting and asked him if I could call back when I was finished.

In the recovery process, one may merit the understandin' of the distinction between "trigger" and "opportunity."
Godspeed to all

I think the machlokes piyut1 and cordnoy is taluy on a shmuz in hilchos yichud, whether the issur is because the situation of yichud could bring to an aveira or is the etzem matzov of yichud the problem and not bc of what it could lead to. I would say the first Tzad is calling it just an opportunity and the second Tzad holds its actually a trigger. Maybe we could apply the same

I've heard that too, but I meant in terms of it being a trigger as opposed to just an opportunity.

Those gedolim probably meant altz the opportunity.
