

There must be a way

Posted by starting - 21 Jul 2020 05:34

---

The y"h gave me a new line of thought today: stopping cold turkey is not for me. I'll forever feel like I'm missing out and I'll get depressed. I should really make my streaks go a bit longer each time.

This is after trying to stop for well over 10 years. How crazy is that?

?I now see even more clearly how he has powers of manipulation that we cannot fathom

Doing it for my good of course. I shouldn't always feel like I'm missing out

The creep

I hereby start my journey to purity

The reason I have not officially done this yet is because I feel that the order of the forum is cleverly designed. I first introduced myself. Then I started a log of trying to break free (this actually in the marrieds section as it's a bit along those lines)

I did not in any way have the strength to attempt a 90. But now I think that the time is ripe. Even if it takes a few tries.

Day 18 (BTW it's my first time at day 18 in my life)

Hatzlacha guys

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by starting - 21 Aug 2020 10:18

---

Baruch hashem I reached that stage where there is a change in perspective.

Now I look at myself as a guy who doesn't fall often.

I'm amazed that the shift in mentality was so smooth and quick.

Just a couple of months ago I was someone who falls almost every day with an occasional clean day.

Now I am not someone who masturbate.

Yes, I can fall on occasion but it's not part of my routine.

It is just something that can happen to me on a bad day.

I think the bigger challenge for me now is getting up after a fall.

This weeks fall felt like a real mistake as the circumstances were unusually challenging and I think that may have made it easier to get up when things calmed down.

I tried to post about what led to my fall on my other thread but it didn't go through. I will hopefully have time to write about it soon ly"h. I think it's quite an important post.

So, today I'm clen b"h.

Thank you all

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Captain - 21 Aug 2020 13:08

---

I love this! Keep up the good work!

This is something that I always found difficult to understand. There's so much focus on viewing ourselves as addicts, but that causes us to feel that we're going to lose the battle and then we do. And we surely lack the confidence needed to fight and win.

?I know that the 12 steps mentions the need to identify oneself as an addict, and many people say that supposedly Rabbanim seemed to be saying that the person should always think he's going to lose. But is that really what they are saying, at the expense of having any confidence in out ability to fight, and at the cost that we view ourselves as people who will surely give in at some point- which will be a self-fulfilling-prophecy? Or do they really mean that we should admit that there's vulnerability and there's a problem that needs work, and that we should also be cautious and not put ourselves situations where we can fall- but without actually identifying ourselves as broken people who will never get things right?

Does anyone else find it unhelpful to think of themselves as incapable in this struggle? Because I think that needing a higher power (Hashem) and being cautious and putting in time and work for this does not contradict the fact that one needs to feel capable with Hashem's help of winning when challenged.

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Guard1 - 21 Aug 2020 17:18

---

Captain, I 100% approve what you just said.

It's a problem of denomination. Nobody IS an addict. It's just some people HAVE bad habits and different ways to react to the lust feelings that are the same for the ones we call 'addicts' and the ones we call 'normal'.

Someone saying that he IS an addict is putting a limited definition on himself, putting himself into a conceptual jail from which he will never escape.

Why not say that you ARE more than anything a jew, a son of Hachem, with a Neshama. This is what you ARE.

Then, you HAVE this job, you HAVE this car, you HAVE those eyes, this face shape, and also, you HAVE some bad habits in the way you react to normal lust feelings.

I just posted something related to this on this subject : guardyoureyes.com/forum/4-On-the-Way-to-90-Days/353856-My-90-day-Journey?limit=15&start=15#354077

=====

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Captain - 21 Aug 2020 17:41

---

I like this. My point was that we should seek to gain all the benefits that come when people label themselves as addicts without the negative consequences and misery that comes along with it, by saying it differently.

"I am a person who is challenged by this and must be cautious and put in work, but I am not defective and permanently broke and I am not an addict for life."

That sounds much better than "I am an addict," which is usually interpreted by the person's brain as "I am an addict and I do these things always, and if by some lucky miracle I manage to reach 90 days clean, I'm still an addict and a tainted person."

=====

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Gevura Shebyesod - 21 Aug 2020 19:15

---

Captain wrote on 21 Aug 2020 17:41:

I like this. My point was that we should seek to gain all the benefits that come when people label themselves as addicts without the negative consequences and misery that comes along with it, by saying it differently.

"I am a person who is challenged by this and must be cautious and put in work, but I am defective and permanently broke and I am not an addict for life."

That sounds much better than "I am an addict," which is usually interpreted by the person's brain as "I am an addict and I do these things always, and if by some lucky miracle I manage to reach 90 days clean, I'm still an addict and a tainted person."

Nice post. But I think you left out a "not" in the second paragraph.

=====

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Captain - 21 Aug 2020 21:20

---

You're right! See, the negative programming of my youth always manages to get its way in somehow lol.

(I fixed it now.)

=====

=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by starting - 24 Aug 2020 14:21

---

Totally agree

Much harder to pull through if you have a mindset of being in a hopeless situation and feeling like the fight is just about a matter of time.

I also believe that most of us are not actually addicts, we just got used to habits which we have to break.

Habits are not addictions and we can definitely pull through with the right mindset.

My Internet did not work work for a few days.

1 week clean b"h

=====

=====

Re: There must be a way
Posted by Markz - 24 Aug 2020 17:47

---

starting wrote on 24 Aug 2020 14:21:

Totally agree

Much harder to pull through if you have a mindset of being in a hopeless situation and feeling like the fight is just about a matter of time.

I also believe that most of us are not actually addicts, we just got used to habits which we have to break.

Habits are not addictions and we can definitely pull through with the right mindset.

My Internet did not work work for a few days.

1 week clean b"h

Isn't drug addiction also another bad habit...

in that case, what is 'addiction'

=====

Re: There must be a way
Posted by starting - 24 Aug 2020 18:10

---

I understand that addiction is actually a very extreme form of habit.

But if you are just watching porn or masturbation, it is a habit. If you are not able to stop without help, it is still a habit.

If you would put yourself into dangerous or totally crazy situations like doing it in public in a steady basis, and you are watching for many hours a day and feel like you would die without an hour of porn, that sounds like an addiction.

Just my understanding, what do you think/have you heard over the years?

=====
=====

Re: There must be a way
Posted by Grant400 - 24 Aug 2020 21:13

---

Take a peek into Webster's dictionary. It seems habit and addiction is one and the same.

=====
=====

Re: There must be a way
Posted by stillgoing - 25 Aug 2020 00:28

---

Captain wrote on 21 Aug 2020 13:08:

.....?I know that the 12 steps mentions the need to identify oneself as an addict,.... But is that really what they are saying, at the expense of having any confidence in our ability to fight, and at the cost that we view ourselves as people who will surely give in at some point- which will be a self-fulfilling-prophecy?

Hi Captain. (Gosh, I feel like I'm in the navy)

The 12 steps actually doesn't mention the word addict at all. Sexaholics Anonymous (who practice the 12 steps) do encourage each other to be honest about who they are. All of those who I've met in sexaholics Anonymous do identify as an addict, but only because they are. If one is an addict, they find that the honesty of admitting it helps them, and if one is not an addict but simply has a bad habit,- by all means - don't call yourself something that you're not. For someone who just has a bad habit there are a lot of easier ways to stop.

But as a caviot, 12 steps or not, let's just be really honest with ourselves. I'm sure some people reading this simply have a 'bad habit' as you say. These people will use gye's many tools, post on the forum and see results. Habits can be hard to break - but they're still only habits. Give yourself a deadline and go for it.

I'm also pretty sure that there are some people reading this who actually are addicts.

Calling myself an addict is not an excuse, and it's not a self-basher. Its simply a recognition that my "habit" is a lot stronger then any of the tools that normally work for habits.

What I choose to do about my addiction is a whole nother story, but calling it a habit if its actually an addiction is similar to saying that Joe Biden is a young energetic clear-speaker - um, which is basically putting my head in the sand because I'd rather not face the alternative.

Kit,

sg

=====
=====

Re: There must be a way
Posted by stillgoing - 25 Aug 2020 00:42

---

Captain wrote on 21 Aug 2020 17:41:

...."I am a person who is challenged by this and must be cautious and put in work, but I am not defective and permanently broke and I am not an addict for life."

That sounds much better than "I am an addict," which is usually interpreted by the person's brain as "I am an addict and I do these things always, and if by some lucky miracle I manage to reach 90 days clean, I'm still an addict and a tainted person."

Ahh, but it is a miracle.

I have a question. i assume you would agree that the classic shikur drunk who even drives drunk, or a real drug addict in a smelly alley is a bonafide addict, not just a bad habit.

Now this druggy and alcoholic then went and admitted that they couldn't stop on their own and were addicted. Then somehow they went to AA, or NA (Narcotics Anonymous), got sober and stayed sober for decades - the rest of their life. This story has happened to hundreds or thousands of people over the last 100 years. Now here's the shayla, (it works better if you say it in gemarah tune) According to what you were saying, maybe they got some lucky miracle and stayed clean for 90 days, but how in shoshan did they stay clean for decades? They were real addicts and admitted it! It should have been a self-fulfilling prophecy, they were tainted and would always fall, yet they built great lives after that..? Good kasha, no?

=====
=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Captain - 25 Aug 2020 18:20

---

I don't see a problem with a person who's an addict referring to himself as an addict. (I didn't mention otherwise, though others on the forum did. Perhaps they feel it's a problem. You can discuss it with them.) I just think that for many people, feeling that such a label is for life and can never be shed makes the struggle harder, not easier. Of course there are exceptions, but for many people they would be better off if they didn't think they were defective for life.

And even more obviously, you should do what works for you. So if that works for you, continue it.

=====
=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by Captain - 25 Aug 2020 18:27

---

No doubt there are many people in a large world who have succeeded at overcoming addiction. There are many people that have succeeded, and many people that have not. The question is not whether it's possible to succeed if the person thinks he will always be labeled defective. The question is whether for most people, that makes it easier or harder. And the bigger question is for each person individually, whether he things such an attitude will make it easier or harder for him.

=====
=====

Re: There must be a way

Posted by starting - 26 Aug 2020 09:56

---

stillgoing wrote on 25 Aug 2020 00:42:

Captain wrote on 21 Aug 2020 17:41:

...."I am a person who is challenged by this and must be cautious and put in work, but I am not defective and permanently broke and I am not an addict for life."

That sounds much better than "I am an addict," which is usually interpreted by the person's brain as "I am an addict and I do these things always, and if by some lucky miracle I manage to reach 90 days clean, I'm still an addict and a tainted person."

Ahh, but it is a miracle.

I have a question. i assume you would agree that the classic shikur drunk who even drives drunk, or a real drug addict in a smelly alley is a bonafide addict, not just a bad habit.

Now this druggy and alcoholic then went and admitted that they couldn't stop on their own and were addicted. Then somehow they went to AA, or NA (Narcotics Anonymous), got sober and stayed sober for decades - the rest of their life. This story has happened to hundreds or thousands of people over the last 100 years. Now here's the shayla, (it works better if you say it in gemarah tune) According to what you were saying, maybe they got some lucky miracle and stayed clean for 90 days, but how in shoshan did they stay clean for decades? They were real addicts and admitted it! It should have been a self-fulfilling prophecy, they were tainted and would always fall, yet they built great lives after that..? Good kasha, no?

I don't think every addict has to consider himself an addict for life.

Perhaps that is one pro of live meetings with recovered addicts. It helps you change your brains way of thinking and you realise that you can use the 12 steps to break free.

For someone who is not going to live meetings and not practicing the 12 steps (or just the first 3), especially if he is not an addict I think this change of mindset is big help. It helps one be wary of situations that are challenging to his habit.

Certainly helps me, and everyone should do whatever works for them.

=====

=====