Great news! Absolutely not a fall! I look at filters as a speed bump or pause button that gives you a chance to catch your breath and reconsider. There is no way I would have stayed clean for over a year without them. Chances are you will always need a filter for when the urge sneaks up on you

Day 41

Yesterday I was having an urge and I looked around the room and first thing I thought was no one else has such sicko thoughts what's wrong with me. But then I realized I have other people who are just as real (sometimes I forget that the people on the forum are actual people) that are going through the same thing and working on themselves. And even if it was true that I am the only one in the room with these thoughts (Which I most probably am not) it's ok because this is my tailor made life that I should overcome and be the best I can.

Day 45

still going strong. Trying to really implement the different way of looking at urges and triggers not as attacks on me but seeing that it's a challenge and it's an opportunity to grow.

Day 47

I don't know how I'm this long clean. I genuinely did not know I had this in me.

Day 49!

this day reminds me of two years ago pesach I was all excited saying it's yom tov of leaving our meitzarim and our personal Galus and I'm going to go the whole sefira clean.... Didn't have a plan didn't know what gye was or anything and fell after two days. Was pretty upset and wondered what's wrong with me.

Just finished my first sefira clean. Wow
