Welcome! This is very common. Please read The Battle of the Generation (link below in my signature). It's very good for this.

Hey, here's a warm hand. Welcome aboard!

It's a process, it takes time. Be patient, and be patient with yourself. Habits and patterns, ways of dealing with things that have been going on for a while are very powerful, takes a while to change and feel good. But the great news is that it can be done!!

It's a great step that you've come on and started posting here. There's a lot to learn, and great people to learn from. Hang on, read some threads, read the book Captain sent you, maybe message some people when you're ready.

It can be quite a ride sometimes, but you can get to where you want to go, with a little help from friends and the Rebono Shel Olam.

Stay in touch!

Chaim Oigen

I usually don't feel good about it either. Sometimes I am proud of myself, but most of the time I don't feel good or satisfied and, on the other hand, I don't feel bad or dissatisfied either.

I like to go back to the 'why.' Why am I doing this? I know why I am doing this and it is not for a sense of satisfaction, gratification, or accomplishment. What is your why?

Positive reinforcement plays a pivotal role in the process of habit transformation. Celebrate your victories, no matter how small, and use them as motivation to propel yourself forward. Recognizing and rewarding positive behavior reinforces the neural pathways associated with the desired changes.

Every time you achieve a mini-goal or milestone, it reinforces the effectiveness and value of your new habits. This makes it more likely that you'll stick with helpful habits going forward. Therefore, rewards (even small ones) can be highly beneficial.

- Reward yourself for milestones: If you're trying to quit a habit, give yourself a treat for every week you abstain. Examples can include a new piece of clothing or equipment, or a meal out.
- Share your success: When others notice your progress and comment on it, this gives you validation and an extra boost in confidence. You don't have to show off or brag, but find people to share your journey with who can celebrate with you.

Oy! Here's a hug....

Have you tried talking to any of the good folks here? It can really help. It's a step and it's a bit scary but after you do it, you'll probably feel 200 pounds lighter. I know I did...

Maybe because you're putting too much thought and emphasis on these feelings.

The good feeling are good but not a must.

The important thing to remember is that our feelings, all of them, are created in our bodies by our thoughts. Bad feelings are not necessarily bad. We, as humans, need to feel the full range of emotions. If we don't experience bad, how will we know and appreciate good? Some things will make us feel sad or angry and trying not to feel those feelings or trying to block them can cause problems too. Negative emotions in everyday situations are a sign for us to pay attention to what we are thinking.

"Think good, and it will be good!"

Correct me if I am wrong. I don't think you need to feel happy all the time and I am not saying you shouldn't. But what you require right now more than happiness might be patience, to persevere through the absolute normality.

Life isn't/doesn't have to be an adrenaline rush. It seems like your chasing a high so you feel like your accomplishing something even though you have already.

Maybe all you need is a bit of patience and persistence through the calm. the storms will come and you will be wishing for these days when they do so if you must do something prepare for that.

The theme of the book The Battle of the Generation is the courage and excitement to fight. I suggest that you regularly read it. I couldn't have broken free without it. Here is the link to the ebook: <https://guardyoureyes.com/ebooks/item/the-battle-of-the-generation>
